Norway Has Made The Test

Norway People Will Get the Benefit

There's nobody in Norway any better known than C. E. Bradford and in giving his experience with Doan's Kidney pills, for the benefit of Norway kidney sufferers, he has nothing whatever to gain.

Why experiment with unknown or imitation kidney remedies when you have such a good reason to try Doan's?

Profit by the test Mr. Bradford has made for you.

C. E. Bradford, prop., laundry, Main St., Norway, says: "At times I had a dull pain through the small of my back, together with a tired feeling. I couldn't rest well. I got Doan's Kidney Pills at Stone's Drug Store and after using two boxes, the pains left and I was greatly improved in every way. I have had no kidney trouble since."

Price 50c, at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mr. Bradford had. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

WILSON'S MILLS.

The town authorities were called on, the first of the week, to see who the new settler was at Asquos Dam, a man claiming to be a Slav. He was in one of the shacks formerly occupied by Italian workmen, when the dam was built. He was inadequately clothed and had nothing to eat, but had contrived some way to have a fire. He was taken to the hotel, given a generous meal, and kindly asked to move on and find work at some of the lumber camps in this section.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Tracey, who had made a three months' trip to California, and visited the San Francisco Exposition, have returned home.

E. S. Bennett took J. F. Horne of Portland up to Hastings camp with a single team, Wednesday, and came down on the ice, also across the new lake, Sunday.

WATERFORD.

Mrs. Ina Powers and family are soon to move to Locke's Mills where her son, George has a job in a spool mill.

Frank Morgan returned from his Greenwood camp, Thursday.

There was a good attendance at the song service, Sunday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. L. R. Rounds. A number of Christmas hymns were an enjoyable part of the hour, while special selections were rendered by a quartet consisting of Mr. and Mrs. Rounds and Mr. and Mrs. Fillebrown, a duet by Mr. and Mrs. Fillebrown and a solo by Katherine Stone.

Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Abbott are in attendance at the State Grange in Portland.

IT ISN'T YOUR TOWN—IT'S YOU.

If you want to live in the kind of a town you need a slip your clothes in a grip and start on a long, long trek.

You'll only find what you left behind. For there's nothing that's really new. It's a knock at yourself when you knock your town.

It isn't your town—it's you.

Real towns are not made by men afraid. Lest somebody else get ahead.

When everyone works and nobody shirks. You can raise a town from the dead.

And while you make your personal stake. Your neighbor can make one, too.

Your town will be what you want to see. It isn't your town—it's you.

A Christmas Letter.

Not long after the war in Europe commenced, the Pope of Rome appointed a day for all Catholics (numbering some 250,000,000) to pray for peace between the fighting nations, and it is presumed that all of that religious sect carried out his request. Soon after, President Wilson appointed another day on which all of the churches of the United States were requested to unite in prayers for a world-wide peace, and yet peace is not in sight at this time.

Perhaps if all those prayers had been serious setting forth the principles of Divine law as Christ taught it and they had been printed and sent out among the people of every nation some effect might have been seen.

I cannot see that God ever makes war or peace, or meddles with nature in any way, but it seems to me that the Divine laws of love and good-will are binding upon nations as well as upon individuals.

These principles were plainly portrayed by the Christ, the greatest teacher, the noblest character, and humanity's most loving brother and benefactor that ever drew to himself the love and reverence of the world.

His mission on earth was to teach the Divine laws, and that mission must have been fulfilled to the satisfaction of God and the angels, for he manifested to all of humanity the deepest love and lived a life of sweetest purity and humility. He was an Essence—the word man—perfect equality, and such belief was expressed always in his teachings. One place is in his prayer—"Thy kingdom come! Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven!"

When Peter had traveled with him long enough to understand his true character, his mighty power of healing—given freely to the poor and afflicted—his love for humanity, and reverence for God, he bestowed upon him the highest and noblest title ever given to a denizen of earth—"The Christ"—signifying "the representative of God on earth."

I believe that when the teachings of Christ are fully carried out they will establish everlasting peace, and flood the earth with light, love and joy.

Happy Christmas to all!

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in its entirety. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for a list of testimonials.

The teacher, Miss Sargent, has a Christmas tree and entertainment with the scholars here Friday afternoon, December 24th. She is trying to make things pleasant for the school. Superintendent F. H. Byam was here in school recently.

The Christian Science lecture in last week's paper is interesting and as the Bible teaches. What fault can anyone of any denomination find with it? God's ways are not our ways and God made man upright and sin is the cause of sickness, suffering and death. Surely "it is in God that we live and move and have our being."

Allows the Howland Will. Judge Grant of the Probate Court of Suffolk County, Mass., Wednesday allowed the will of Mrs. Helen F. Howland of 320 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, but certified it to the Supreme Court for a trial by jury in view of the contest made by the adopted daughter of the testatrix, who alleges the latter was of unsound mind when she made the will. The testatrix was the widow of J. Frank Howland of the Walter Baker Company, chocolate manufacturers and who died on his farm at South Paris.

She left one-third of her estate to Joseph DeLan, and his wife of Niles, Mich.; one-third to her sister, Sarah P. Barnes and son of Cambridge, and one-third in trust for the benefit of her adopted daughter, Florence D. Howland. The will was executed January 2, 1915 and in a prior will, dated April 5, 1914, the testatrix left the bulk of her estate to the adopted daughter.

The Grange. Paris Grange was called to order by Worth Master Ryerson at 11:30 a. m., December 18. Officers present at roll call: Master, Overseer, Steward, Assistant Steward, Chaplain, Secretary, Gatekeeper and Ceres. One application was received and the first and second degrees were conferred on one candidate. After a recess for dinner, the Grange resumed work in open session.

It was "Past Master's day" and the following program was carried out: Music by Grange choir; Past Master, Silas P. Maxim, the oldest man in the town of Paris, gave a very interesting talk on the past history of the Grange; Dr. G. M. Twichell gave a lecture on "The cost of an Apple," which was very instructive and won a hearty applause; Sisters Hammond and Kennedy sang a duet and responded to an encore. Past Masters, H. D. Hammond, John S. Brown, R. H. Gater, Howard Swan, O. K. Clifford, James Millett, A. N. Cairns, Geo. S. Bartlett, L. A. Brooks and Chas. Edwards were present and responded to the call of the Lecturer.

Next meeting, January 1st at 10:30 a. m. degree work and basket dinner followed by installation of officers.

THE BOY COLLECTOR'S HAND BOOK

The Boy Collector's Handbook, by Alpheus Hyatt Verrill, author of "The Boys' Outdoor Vacation Book," etc., is well illustrated with photographs and diagrams. This is a highly interesting book of 290 pages, which covers thoroughly the boy and at the same time sharpens his powers of observation.

The subjects treated are: Why and what to collect; rocks and minerals; fossils; plants and vegetable specimens; insects; fresh water animals; marine animals. Under the camera and the microscope are the "Photographing of wild things" and "The use and value of the microscope. Under collections of made objects are "Indian relics," "war, historical, and other relics," "Stamps, coins, postcards, etc."

A. Hyatt Verrill is the son of Prof. A. E. Verrill of New Haven, Conn., who spent the summer with his daughter, Mrs. Vivian Akers in Norway.

The publishers are McBride, Nast & Co., Union Sq., North, New York. The price $1.50, postage 12 cents.

COLD WEATHER FISH.

"Cold weather is the finnan haddie season," said Aunt Jane, "and there are few more delicious dishes for breakfast, dinner or supper—than the fish from the sea. This is really a Scotch dish, and is capable of being prepared in a number of ways."
"To broil the fish, you heat the broiler and grease it well to keep the fish from sticking; then place the fish on the broiler and cook slowly for 15 minutes. Then turn the fish and cook slightly. Be careful not to burn it. After removing it from the fire, butter it well and add pepper to suit taste. It should be served with a slice of lemon."
"To bake the fish, place it in cold water and let it come to a boil; then take it out and remove the skin. Place it in a pan with a few slices of fat pork, and bake it in a moderate oven for a half hour."
"To boil finnan haddie," said Aunt Jane, "place a good-sized kettle full of water on the stove and let it come to a boil. Put in the fish and cook it for 20 minutes."
"Some folks, in broiling the fish, use a dripping pan instead of a regular broiler. The process is the same."
"Another fine way of serving the fish is with cream sauce. Tear the fish into small strips, and place it in a basin with a quart of water. Let it simmer half an hour, then pour off the water and add a pint of fresh milk. When it begins to boil, thicken it with a spoonful of flour. Let it boil five minutes, add butter the size of a walnut, and a little pepper and serve."

"Because it requires little effort and little time, frying is one of the favorite methods of cooking almost every kind of fish," said Aunt Jane. "It should be remembered, however, that even this simple operation has a proper and improper mode of procedure. Strange to say, even many housewives of long experience do not seem to have mastered this extremely simple matter, either."
"In the first place, as a rule, fish should not be cut into round slices, but should be cut into filets. This again is an operation which few cooks have mastered. The fish should be laid on a flat surface. With a sharp knife make an incision in the back at the base of the head. Continue this to the tail, cutting the flesh on one side entirely away from the backbone. This operation repeated with the other side of the fish gives two long slabs of fish flesh. The heavy back bone has been eliminated and the fish is eaten easier. Also, instead of having a thick chunk of flesh, which cooks imperfectly, you have a slice of uniform thickness, which cooks evenly and can be browned a great deal better."

"Scrod, haddock, cod, eusk, and in fact all round fishes, except smelts and other tiny varieties, should be cut in this manner when they are to be fried. Halibut, swordfish, albacore and other fish of a similar nature are, of course, usually cut in round slices, while small fish, such as smelt, butter fish and tinker mackerel are cooked whole."
"Fish should always be fried like doughnuts, in deep fat. Bacon drippings are perhaps as good a material as any. Butter should not be used for frying fish. "It should be cooked until well browned and then removed and allowed to drain, but not grow cold before serving. If the filets prepared as above are cut into individual portions before being cooked, the housewife has no crumpled mass of fish as the result of her labors, but firm, well-cooked, brown squares of a delicious food."

An Italian Girl's Vengeance

A Story of Sorrento

By F. A. MITCHEL

Sorrento, the famous Italian seaside resort, is built on a cliff several hundred feet high. The cliff is curved, the northern end flanked by Mount Vesuvius, the southern end pointing to the Mediterranean sea. The town is composed chiefly of hotels and villas, some of them set in the center of orange groves. At the base of the cliff are the homes of fisher folk, their boats moored on a narrow beach. There is no sea view in the world more beautiful than that from Sorrento. One may gaze upon the ever changing hue of the waters beneath, the islands of Ischia and Capri, here and there a ship or the little white steamer that carries the passengers between Naples and the islands, while shoreward to the right is the cone Vesuvius with its mist of smoke about its summit.

Julian Hemstreet, a young American of fortune who was traveling abroad previous to settling down to the management of his estate, went to Sorrento and was so charmed with it that he was in no hurry to move on. Having sailor instincts he was drawn toward the shore directly beneath where the fleet of fishing craft was either hauled up on the beach or nodding at anchor.

Entering a wine shop, he asked a girl he found there how he should proceed to hire a boat. He knew enough of the Italian language to converse fairly well, and she gave him the necessary information. While she was doing so Julian ordered a liter of wine, which she brought and set on a table before him. There was nothing in the shop to look at except the girl, so Julian fixed his eyes upon her, and the longer he looked the more he found food for admiration.

Lita—that was her name—was dressed in the costume of Italy, which has in it a good deal of color. Like all, or nearly all, Italians, she was brunette, with a wealth of black hair and eyes of a dark brown. She was comely in her way, but not beautiful; nevertheless there was a novelty for Julian in her makeup, especially her costume. It was not long before he was paying her compliments, which meant little to him, but meant much to the girl.

Julian, having learned where he could get a boat, went for a sail on the bay, for he was accustomed to handling such craft, and when he returned called at the shop for another liter of wine. He was a handsome fellow, entirely different from the men Lita knew. It was a question how far a man is responsible for a girl's falling in love with him. In this case Julian would not have prevented it even by refraining from the little compliments that he considered due any woman. She was confronted by that which dazzled her and was dazzled. Possibly if Julian had realized the damage being done he would have withdrawn, though later, when it became plain to him, he did no such thing. But then it would have been much more difficult to withdraw than at the beginning.

One morning Julian was in the orange grove that surrounded his hotel, plucking the ripe fruit, when from another part of the grove came a ripple of feminine laughter, and a moment later a girl appeared from among the trees. On seeing a young man her features changed from mirth to seriousness and she passed on into the hotel.

There could be no greater difference between two women than between this girl and the Italian at the foot of the cliff. The former was a blond whose complexion was still soft as that of a child, a rose tint mingled with whiteness. The eyes were blue, the hair what is commonly called golden. She was Mildred Twining, a member of an American family who were touring in Europe. Julian, who was of an age to be easily impressed with feminine beauty, was much pleased at the sudden change on the face of the girl, on coming upon him so suddenly. Several other persons with whom she had been in the grove, including a child, followed her into the house, passing him closely, but so charmed was he with the girl that he took no note of the others.

Americans abroad are as prone to make friends with one another as they are to stand apart at home, and it was not long before Julian formed the acquaintance of the party of which Mildred Twining was a member. The ease with which tourists become friends is extended to the sexes, and there is no more prolific source of uniting hearts than sightseeing in foreign lands. Julian Hemstreet attached himself to the Twining party, or, rather, to Mildred Twining, and everywhere they went he went.

One day Julian proposed to his new found friends to take them to sail on the bay. They accepted his invitation and, having descended to the beach, stood waiting while Julian was making preparation for the embarkation. Lita, the wine shop girl, saw the party and went out to wait at them. When Julian handed Mildred on to the boat Lita was watching him and saw an expression on his face as he looked down into the blue eyes that caused within the Italian's bosom a commotion of jealousy, hate, revenge. But no one knew of it except herself. Julian was so wrapped in the girl he was handing into the boat that he did not even see the other. When the party returned from the sail Lita was screened from them by a window, through which she looked at Miss Twining with the eyes of a tigress.

Julian after his meeting with Miss Twining made no more visits to the wine shop. He did not realize the hold his personality had taken upon Lita, but was aware that he should have withdrawn from the latter's company sooner. Nevertheless he did not look upon the sudden flame he had inspired in her as of much importance. The fierceness of southern women in such matters did not occur to him. When he looked on Vesuvius, with its crest of smoke hanging lazily on its summit, he did not realize that down in the breast of the Italian girl there lurked a fire equal in intensity if not in force to that in the mountain.

One day when Julian and Mildred were rambling about the grounds of the hotel where they stopped they came upon a passage way leading down to the water. They concluded to go through it. On reaching the lower end they came upon a dock. There they stood looking out on the water. They were some distance from the wine shop, but Lita saw a couple on the dock and with the keen scent of love surmised that they were Julian and the girl who had stepped in between her and him.

Catching up a dirk knife and thrusting it into her bosom, she ran along the shore, now clambering between the water and the cliff, now stooping beneath some object to conceal her approach till she came near the dock on which the couple were standing unconscious of her approach; then, ducking under the side of the dock, she ran along it till she reached the margin of the water. There she stood listening to the pair on the dock, who were above her and a little farther out from the shore.

Hemstreet was talking to his companion in English, a language the Italian girl did not understand. He was well educated, and the ancient Romans had always interested him. He was pointing out different objects of interest within view—the island Capri near by, Ischia in the distance to the north, and opposite what in old Roman times was a city of summer residences called Baiae, owned and occupied by wealthy Romans. He described the scene on the bay, the view from the shore, the night nearly twenty centuries before when the bay splended shooting here and there in the lurid light of the fires emitted by Vesuvius, those upon them engaged in trying the dangerous work of saving the fleeing Pompeians, who were struggling in darkness under the cloud of ashes raining upon their devoted heads and buried their city, which now, after having been buried for twenty centuries, is being uncovered, to be visited every year by thousands of a civilization far different from that which passed slowly out of existence from the Italian peninsula.

Then Hemstreet spoke of the partings that took place on that eventful night, when parents, children, lovers, lost one another in the darkness. The only English word Lita knew to whom the girl who served him had been accustomed. It is a question how far a man is responsible for a girl's falling in love with him. In this case Julian would not have prevented it even by refraining from the little compliments that he considered due any woman. She was confronted by that which dazzled her and was dazzled. Possibly if Julian had realized the damage being done he would have withdrawn, though later, when it became plain to him, he did no such thing. But then it would have been much more difficult to withdraw than at the beginning.

Lita stood aghast at what she had done, then with a cry sprang up the side of the dock just as Julian, sinking, was caught in Mildred's arms. Mildred, who had not seen the knife thrown, only knew that it was her companion's side, but before she could act Lita pulled it out and threw it into the water, then with a kerchief she wiped about her shoulders began to stanch the blood.

"Who did it?" cried Mildred. "It was an accident," said Julian faintly. "Little words mean just as much as big words, and they contain less hot air."

Some men were working on a boat not far distant and Lita beckoned them to come. When they reached the dock Julian had fainted, but he soon revived and was carried to one of the houses on the beach. There he remained for a time, the surgeons undecided whether or not he would recover. No persuasion could induce him to declare how he had come by the wound, and Mildred Twining, not seeing the knife that some one had thrown out a theory, that some one had called near him had thrown the knife at him for the purpose of rendering him a prey for robbery. But although there are many criminals in Italy the theory was not believed, for it would not be easy for any one to have lurked near him and get away after stabbing him without being seen.

Julian as soon as he was able to be moved was carried to the top of the cliff and lay at his hotel till he recovered. Miss Twining left with her party, the only one who did not suspect that the girl who had been near her and Julian at the time he was wounded had been his assailant. Julian joined Miss Twining later in Switzerland, and there resulted an engagement between them. But he kept his secret from her. Whether he ever saw Lita after the attempt on her rival's life is not known; probably not, since her people, knowing that she had committed a crime, sent her up into the mountains where she would not be attainable if called to an account.

SORROW.

This seems to be a great truth, in any exile or chaos whatsoever, that sorrow was not given us for sorrow's sake, but always and infallibly as a lesson to us from which we are to learn somewhat; and which, the somewhat once learned, ceases to be the sorrow.—Thomas Carlyle.

PARIS HILL
Charles D. Whittemore.
Charles D. Whittemore died at his home just beyond Paris Hill, Monday night, Dec. 20th, at the age of 67 years, 8 months, and three days. Death was due to cancer.
Mr. Whittemore was the son of Albion and Sophia (Cole) Whittemore, and was born in Paris April 4, 1858. He has made his home in New York for many years, where he was an engineer on the railroad for nearly forty years, but for the past two and one-half years, on account of failing health, has resided at Paris Hill. He is survived by a widow and five children.
The funeral was held Thursday afternoon, at 2:30, attended by Rev. Mr. Hill. Burial took place in the Whittemore Cemetery.

The Little Breeze Blew Right Through the Window.

Daddy's Bedtime

How the Vagrant Breeze Became a Worker.

"ONCE a vagrant breeze became a worker," said daddy as he smiled at Jack and Evelyn and began the evening story.

"What's a vagrant breeze, daddy, and why did it become a worker?" asked Evelyn.

"A vagrant breeze," explained daddy, "is a breeze that apparently comes from nowhere, has nowhere in particular to go and nothing in particular to do. So it just blows around here and there, willy nilly."

"But how can a breeze work?" asked Jack.

"I'll tell you," said daddy. "Once this breeze that I am telling you about got loose somehow from the useful breezes and became a vagrant. It was a beautiful day, and the breezes roundabout were all happy, and the sun was happy, and the green leaves and grasses and the flowers that it shone upon were happy, too, and the children that ran around in the sunshine were happy, and I guess everything and everybody were happy except this foolish little vagrant breeze, which wasn't happy because it had nothing to do."

"The little vagrant breeze knew other breezes were happy and that there was a reason for it, but it couldn't just make up its mind what the reason was. So it made up its breezy mind to find out."

"There was a golden sunbeam floating around quite close to where the vagrant breeze was stirring, and the breeze determined to ask this sunbeam the secret. So it said to the sunbeam: 'I am a vagrant breeze, and I am not happy. What is the reason?'

"That's easy," replied the sunbeam. 'You are not happy because you are a vagrant breeze. What you need is something useful to do.'

"What is there useful that I can do?" asked the breeze.

"The sunbeam had been looking around. 'Ah,' it said, 'the very thing! Do you see that child over there in that close little room, the little girl who is ill?'

"Yes," answered the vagrant breeze; 'I see her.'

"Well," said the sunbeam, 'you just blow right over there through that window and flutter around that little girl's face so she will be cooler and more comfy. Then you come back here, and I will tell you other things to do.'

"So the little breeze breezed right over through the window and fluttered ever so gently around the little girl's face. She smiled, and her little wan face really took on a touch of color which made the little breeze very happy somehow, and right then and there it became a busy breeze and was happy."

The Scrap Book

Quick Wit Won.

George Grossmith was once singing the lord chancellor's song in "Tolanthe," which has for its refrain, "Said I to myself, said I, when something caught fire at the back of the stage. Grossmith himself wasn't aware of the occurrence, but he suddenly saw the audience jump from their seats and turn their backs on him."

At the same moment the stage manager shouted from the wings to Grossmith: "Don't stop singing! Go on, go on!"

Grossmith immediately grasped the situation and sang fortissimo some words that came to him on the spur of the moment:

I assure my friends who are ready to choke
That the fire they fear is nothing but smoke;
It is only a sort of Gilbertian joke,
Says I to myself, says I.

This gag, which at any other time would have been extremely reprehensible in Gilbertian opera, calmed the panic, and the audience resumed their seats—Every Week.

The Favored.

Life gave him hours of labor long
With guerdons frail and few,
And Fate no gift of precious song
For cheer the gray years through.
But God, who knows how soon the charm
Of such gifts may depart,
Gave him the greatest gift of all—
A happy heart.

He found much bitter in the cup
That he was forced to drain.
When morning's sun rose brightly up
It often set with rain.
When Fortune seemed to wander near
She came but to depart,
For he had what she could not give—
A happy heart.

—Arthur Wallace Peach.

A Lovely Sunday.

"My man," said the traveler in his best manner, "is this a railroad station or a perpetually endowed waiting room?"

"It's a railroad station, sir," answered the polite station agent.

"Well, then, do the trains run on tracks or speculation?" he demanded.

"On tracks, sir," replied the polite station agent.

"Well, then, how is it that I've been waiting here ever since 2 o'clock for that 2:13 train, and it's now 5:15 and no train yet? Take a look at this time table and at this watch, please, and tell me why."

The polite station agent looked as requested and then said softly, "Because that's a weekday time table, sir."

It was a lovely Sunday—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

A Salutory Lesson.

"Now, remember your salutes," said the English corporal when posting the Irish recruit on sentry. "If you see a lieutenant—he wears one star on his shoulder—slope arms; if you see a major—a crown—present arms; if the colonel—stars and crown—present and turn out the guard."

Pat pondered his orders carefully, but presently he was awakened from his reverie by the approach of the general.

"That worthy son of Mars surveyed the cross swords on the gallant officer's shoulders and as he was not included in the corporal's category simply nodded cheerfully."

"Well, my man," said the genial general, "and who are you supposed to be?"

"I'm supposed to be a bit of a sentry," said Patrick. "And who are you?"

"Oh, I'm supposed to be a bit of a general," said the latter.

"A general, is it?" cried the startled Pat. "Then ye'll want something big. The corporal told me about the others, but nothing about yourself at all, at all. But hold hard a minute, and I'll give ye the baronet exactly as that'll do."

Squared Himself.

Fighting Lord Charlie Beresford and Sir Redvers Buller both deservedly earned a high reputation for bulldog tenacity of purpose.

During a Nile campaign Lord Charles and Sir Redvers, descending some "bad water" in a river steamer, got into a discussion as to the proper channel to be taken. Each obstinately defended his own course, but in the end Buller got his own way, with the result that the steamer ran through safely.

"You see, I was right!" cried the general. "Mighty was the proper channel."

"That was mine, too," coolly replied Lord Charles. "I only recommended the other because I knew you would go against whatever I said."

Demonstrated.

The very young minister, on trial for his first charge, was well satisfied with his sample sermon. Fully expecting a compliment, he asked one of the elders for a criticism. The old gentleman replied that "they wis ge y fine words, but a bit heady for common folk."

The young man disagreed volubly, whereupon the elder proceeded to justify his opinion.

"Ye told us at the laist to 'draw an inference,' ye ken. See at this noo. Aw, Sandy!" beckoning to an old fellow member over the way. "Sandy, div ye think ye could draw an inference the day?"

Sandy gnawed his finger a full minute in silence. Then:

"Awel," he submitted cautiously, "I amna sae strang as I wis syne, but if it wisna the Sawbath I hae a pair o' steers out yan that can fair draw the weight o' the meetin' house!"

The Wrong Car.

There is the old story of the man who boarded three cars, only to discover that none of them was the car he wanted. Boarding a fourth in a high state of irritation, he waxed a trifle profane in his conversation with the conductor. A severely pious-looking old man sitting near the door overheard and remarked a little sharply:

"My friend, did you know that you are on the road to perdition?"

"Well, if I'm not on the wrong car again," was the retort of the unabashed passenger.—Every Week.

Not Infallible.

The new system of memory training was being taught in a village school, and the teacher was becoming enthusiastic.

"You see," he said, addressing the bright pupil, "in order to fix a thing in your mind you should conjure up some sort of picture in your mind's eye, representing what you want to bear in mind."

"Yes, sir," said the bright pupil. "It sounds—very nice, and I've no doubt the advice is excellent if you could tell me what it means."

"Well, for instance," said the teacher, "supposing you want to remember the name of a poet—Bobby Burns. Fix in your mind's eye a picture of a policeman in flames. See—Bobby Burns!"

"Yes, I see, sir," said the bright pupil. "But how is one to know that it does not represent Robert Browning?"

—London Globe.

He Was Sarcastic.

A man in the English veteran reserves was called up recently. After a week at his new quarters he was brought up before the officer commanding for not cleaning his rifle one day. Said the officer commanding: "Hem, you're an old soldier re-enlisted. I see. I suppose it will be many years ago since you were reprimanded? What was your last offense? Can you remember what it was?"

The old soldier, with irony on account of the repeated assertions to his age, replied, "For not cleanin' my bow an' arrow, sir!"

A PAIR OF NEW BOOTS.

They Figured In an Amusing Case of Mistaken Identity.

It may be doubted if there ever occurred a more amusing instance of mistaken identity than that afforded by Theodore Hook, and it came about through a pair of boots.

Hook was traveling along the south coast of England and arrived in the course of his journey at Dover.

Alighting at the Ship hotel, he changed his boots, ordered a slight dinner and went out for a stroll through the town. Returning at the appointed time, he was surprised to find the whole establishment in confusion. A crowd had collected outside the door. The matter of the house was standing at the foot of the stairs with two candles in his hands, and on Theodore's entrance he walked backward before him and conducted him into the principal saloon, where all the waiters were standing and a magnificent repast had been provided.

The wit was much amused at the dignity to which he had been promoted, but, being an easy going fellow, made no scruples and, sitting down, did full justice to what was set before him. Next day he signified his intention of departing and ordered a coach, when, to his astonishment, a carriage and four drove up to convey him to his destination. He inquired with some apprehension what he was to pay for all this grandeur and was no less astonished than gratified when he received a low bow and the answer, "Nothing whatever, your royal highness."

He was never more thoroughly mystified, but the next night on taking off his boots, which he had bought in London ready made just before he went to Dover, he found "H. S. H. the Prince of Orange" written inside them. They had been originally made for the prince, who was then in England suing for the hand of Princess Charlotte, and notice had been given that all his expenses while in the country should be set down to the charge of the government.

The End In View

If you mean to act nobly and seek to know the best things which God hath put within the reach of men you must fix your mind on that end and not what will happen to you because of it.

—George Eliot.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

To wash discolored embroidery place in a vessel with cold water, blued, but not too deep, and with the juice of a lemon. Boil for half an hour and afterward rinse in cold water and dry in fresh air.

Bread should never be covered with a cloth when taken from the oven, but laid on the side and allowed to become perfectly cold, then kept in a closely covered tin box without any wrappings.

To clean white paint use very hot water, and add to one part of water a tablespoonful of turpentine and a little borax. Wipe very dry and rub with a cloth dipped in whiting.

When a boot or shoe pinches wring a cloth out in very hot water and place it over the place while the boot is on the foot. This expands the leather and will give relief.

It is a good plan to turn a colander over hominy, eggs or anything that splatters while cooking. By so doing the food will brown well and will not steam.

To tint discolored lace curtains mix cornstarch with an equal quantity of ordinary starch, boil and use in the same way as white starch.

If the little girl's petticoat is too short and there are no tucks to let out open the seams on the shoulders and set in a piece of muslin.

Try raisins cooked with oatmeal.

KIND WORDS.

Kind words produce their own image in men's souls. They soothe and quiet and comfort the hearer. They shame him out of his sour, morose, unkind feelings. We have not yet begun to use kind words in such abundance as they ought to be used.—Pascal.

GET RID OF HUMORS AND AVOID DISEASE

Humors in the blood cause internal derangements that affect the whole system, as well as pimples, boils and other eruptions. They affect all the organs and functions, membranes and tissues, and are directly responsible for the readiness with which some people contract disease.

For forty years Hood's Sarsaparilla has been more successful than any other medicine in expelling humors and removing their inward and outward effects. It is distinguished for its thoroughness in purifying the blood, which it enriches and invigorates. No other medicine acts like it, for no other medicine is like it.

Get Hood's Sarsaparilla today. Insist on having Hood's.

NORTH WATERFORD.

Mrs. Elizabeth Morse, Mrs. S. L. Lebrooke and Sadie Rowe went to Portland to attend the Grange meeting this week to be held there.

The following officers were elected at the Rebekahs Saturday night:

NEW ENGLAND ANIMAL FERTILIZERS

Growing Plants Need the Right Food

Agricultural products are steadily increasing in value. The demand for best crops brings out the demand for best fertilizers—the natural plant food that makes crops grow.

New England Animal Fertilizers are made from BONE, BLOOD, MEAT and high-grade Chemicals—nature's own prescription for the most powerful crop producers known! They restore fertility to the soil and keep it there. They grow good crops by feeding nature's real plant food.

There's a brand of New England Fertilizer for every crop, and there's a profitable year for every crop fertilized with this organic food of BONE, BLOOD and MEAT. Send for Booklet showing results in 1915 without potash.

Your land will increase in value for every pound of animal fertilizer you put into it. The soil will be richer and the yield each year will be better. Put your farm in top-notch order by seeing our dealer or writing us.
